

The thousands of health care professionals that have integrated RAAPS and ACT into their workflow have found that quality of care has substantially improved with the help of real-time data and reporting. Clinical data holds the potential to transform the U.S. healthcare system, and most importantly, save lives. Tracking risky behaviors at the population level is the most direct and valuable way to support teens.

Innovative technology collects data to help answer these questions

- What are the greatest risks in my teen population?
- Are we seeing improvements in teen risks over time after assessment and counseling?
- What does the population data show that could be used to direct programming and counseling?
- What risk behavior disparities exist in my teen population?
